INTRODUCTION: BY MARK RENWICK

Scope

George Wright’s recordings were released in the US, Canada, Europe, and beyond on a variety of record labels, frequently featuring different cover art for the same record. With a few exceptions, our focus in this discography has been on original, US domestic releases. We have not attempted to document the myriad of non-US releases, nor reissues that continue to appear to this day. Our goal has been to document GW’s commercially released recordings in their first appearances on the market.

NOTE TO COLLECTORS: As of 2017, Amazon.com sellers and others offer CD versions of GW’s vinyl recordings. More often than not, these off-brand CDs are nothing more than low-quality dubs of the original vinyl. These CDs are NOT recommended. BANDA Records is today’s definitive source for GW CDs (including some planned future releases of never-before-heard material), available at http://www.GeniusOfGeorgeWright.com.

Dates

Electrical Transcriptions

Our journey through GW’s commercial recorded output begins with electrical transcriptions (ETs), also known as radio transcriptions or transcription discs. ETs were 33 1/3 rpm 16-inch phonograph records produced strictly for use by radio stations. Companies such as Thesaurus (a division of NBC), Standard Transcription Library, and Muzak used these discs to license their “music libraries” to radio stations, who were free to air them at their own discretion. Thus, radio station personnel could broadcast “George Wright at the Organ” anytime they wanted, by subscribing to a transcription service that included George Wright among its artists. ETs were used for music libraries (as well as prerecorded radio shows) from the 1930s into the early 1960s.

Aside from GW, many other organists, including Gaylord Carter, Buddy Cole, Jesse Crawford, Fred Feibel, and Dick Leibert recorded electrical transcriptions for music libraries.

It was common practice for the performers on two sides of a given disc to be completely different. For example, GW might be on side one, while the Wayne King Orchestra is on side two. Sometimes, the same side of a disc contained different performers. There are examples of these in this discography.

GW appears on ETs as a solo performer, as a member of the Charles Magnante Quartet, and as a member of the Novatime Trio. In addition, there is at least one appearance (with Dick Stewart) on an Armed Forces Radio Service ET.

In this discography, the transcriptions begin with the Associated Program Service (APS), a division of Muzak. Figure 1 compares a typical APS transcription disc—sixteen inches in diameter and pressed into red vinyl—with a typical 12-inch LP. Figure 2 shows a close up of the label of the red disc shown in Figure 1. The word “vertical” on the label indicates that this disc was cut with a groove that moves the playback stylus up and down, the so-called “hill and dale” method, rather than the more common lateral groove that moves the playback stylus to the left and right.

GW's solo recordings for APS were recorded on the 4/36 Wurlitzer in the main auditorium of the New York Paramount Theatre. GW also recorded on Hammond for APS as a member of the Charles Magnante Quartet.

For Thesaurus transcriptions, GW recorded under his own name (playing the Hammond, piano, and Novachord together) and as a member of the Novatime Trio. The Hammond recordings are fine examples of early GW, while the Novachord Trio arrangements are, with a few exceptions, generally low-key and bland. An example is shown in Figure 3.

The 78s

GW's first commercial releases for the general public were on 78 rpm records, recorded in New York, beginning in the 1940s. Most were reissued on vinyl LP by their original recording companies. Wherever possible, we have included information about the original 78s and their reissues. Present-day GW collectors, no doubt, will be interested primarily in the 33 1/3 LPs and CDs; the 78s are interesting in that they place these recordings in historical context.

King Records released a series of ten, 10-inch 78s featuring GW at the New York Paramount Theatre Wurlitzer in the main auditorium. These tracks appeared with the typical King label (Figure 4) but also in special “Dee Jay” versions (Figure 5) that included biographical information on the record label. Many of these pipe organ tracks found their way to 10-inch LPs, a 12-inch LP, and extended-play 45s.

There was even a special version of “Take Me Out to the Ball Game” for ball parks (Figure 6).

In addition to recordings of the Times Square Paramount Wurlitzer, King released the “Sister Slocum” records featuring GW on the Hammond, with a guitar and spoons. The “Sister Slocum” material was reissued on an LP that came in two distinct jackets with different titles: “Favorite Organ Solos” and “George...

Regent Records also produced GW recordings in New York. It is likely that all tracks appearing on the two Regent LPs (one 10-inch and the other 12-inch) were originally released as 78s. A sample appears in Figure 8. As is often the case, the label does not specify the organ that was used. In this case, it was the New York Paramount broadcast studio Wurlitzer, not the main organ as implied by “At the New York Paramount Theatre Organ” on the label.

HIFI Records and the “Life Series”

Between 1955 and 1959, GW recorded his legendary recordings for HIFI Records. The first release of “George Wright Plays the Mighty Wurlitzer” featured HIFI’s black, red, and silver label. It was originally available only in monaural. (See Figure 9.) The simulated stereo version is shown in Figure 10.
Some monaural version labels looked more like the stereo label, except that the vertical “stereo” was replaced with large numbers indicating record side. (See Figure 11.)

GW severed his business relationship with Richard Vaughn and HIFI Records in 1959. However, in 1965, HIFI Records, on its “Life Series” label, released four more GW recordings of previously unreleased material. Rumor has it that these tracks were outtakes or otherwise not intended by GW to be released.

“Command Performance,” “A George Wright Original”, “Sweet and Low”, and “Tibia & Vox” were the only GW albums to appear on the “Life Series” label in their first release. All other GW “Life Series” recordings are reissues that appeared after Richard Vaughn left the record business. Figure 12 shows an original Life Series GW LP.

The HIFI labels (“HIFI Records,” “Life Series,” “Arvee,” and “Orbit”) were sold by 1965 to the Everest label, part of the Everest Group. Everest reissued many HIFI GW records during the 1960s. For an unknown reason (probably to confuse future collectors), Everest used the “Life Series” label for most of these reissues, including those that had originally been HIFI Records. Thus we have what were originally HIFI Records reissued on the Life Series label. For example, “South Pacific” originally appeared with a HIFI label, but was reissued by Everest with Life Series label (see Figure 13.)
After HIFI

Following his affiliation with HIFI Records, GW launched his own record label, Solo Records, which released his first recording “Let George Do It” on the South Pasadena studio organ. Following the financial flop of Solo Records, GW recorded primarily for Dot Records and BANDA.

New York Paramount Theatre broadcast studio Wurlitzer. While it seems likely that all tracks appearing on the two Regent LPs were originally released as 78s, we have been able to verify only the two shown below.

1. Silent Night/Adeste Fideles. Regent 5000, circa 1950. Organ with chimes.

TWELVE-INCH 33 1/3 RPM LPs (UNLESS OTHERWISE NOTED)

1. Christmas Organ Music, New York Paramount Theatre main auditorium Wurlitzer, 10-inch LP, Regent MG 5001, 1950. In a letter to Eric Reeve, GW identified the organ as the main auditorium Wurlitzer, noting how similar the organs sounded on the Christmas record and the Regent Paramount studio record (MG-6022). Close-miking in the theatre may account for GW’s unexpected observation. Also released by Regent as a set of three 10-inch 78s in 1948. Recorded in 1947.

   SIDE 1: Silent Night • Oh Holy Night • Ave Maria
   SIDE 2: Adeste Fideles • It Came Upon a Midnight Clear • O, Little Town of Bethlehem
